Denise (Chairperson): "Good morning everyone. The main goal today is to catch up on the latest updates and review some problems we have in the company."

Daniel (Participant): "Is this going to take long? My inbox is full and I have more important things to do."

Juan Manuel (Participant): "Um... yes, I'm ready to start whenever you say, no rush."

Berta (Note-Taker): "I have the document open. You can start whenever you feel like paying attention."

Denise: "The first critical problem we need to address today is the financial situation for this quarter."

Denise: "To try and improve the situation, we have an important update: we are going to implement a new clocking system."

Juan Manuel: "Is that new clocking system... going to be very hard to use? I'm not very good with technology."

Daniel: "If the old system didn't crash so much, maybe people wouldn't arrive 'late'. It's the machine's fault."

Berta: "Funny how the machine only crashes for the same people. The new system is noted."

Juan Manuel (Passive): (Looking at the table, nervous) "I... truthfully, prefer not to share an opinion on the environment. Whatever the majority decides is fine with me."

Daniel (Aggressive): "Why do you even ask him if he never says anything? Just finish this nonsense already, please."

Denise: "This concludes the meeting. I want to thank everyone for your time and for sticking to the agenda."

Berta: "I will send the meeting minutes in a few moments. I trust that, this time, people will actually bother to read them."
